Sam has autism and severe learning disabilities and lived at home with his ageing parents until his behaviour became increasingly difficult for them to manage.....

Sam enjoys lots of activities like looking through books, going for a drive and taking walks. As options were explored for Sam to go into residential care it was important these activities were preserved for him. After lots of visits and trials, a new home was found for Sam. His personal budget was used to employ personal assistants to continue all the daytime activities that he enjoyed. This ensured the transition to his new life was as smooth as possible.
